Motions, Points and Forms of Address

It can be difficult for a delegate to remember all forms of speech and all the convoluted jargon used by his/her colleagues during sessions, which is why you can find a list of the most important motions, points and forms of address below. Take note that, whilst points do not need to be seconded, motions do.

Motion or Point	Reason and Effect
Point of Information	Used for asking a delegation a question after his/her speech
Point of Order	Used for informing the chair about a procedural error
Point of Personal Privilege	Used for asking the chair for a personal, quality of life improvement
Point of Parliamentary Inquiry	Used for asking the chair about a clarification of the rules of procedure
Point of Information to the Chair	Used for asking the chair about anything not covered by the point above
Motion to Divide the House	Used for proposing a vote in which all delegations are obligated to take a side
Motion to Extend Debating Time	Used for extending the time allocated to giving speeches and asking questions
Motion to Move to the Previous Question	Used for ceasing the debate on a current issue, and commencing debate on the following issue
Motion to Adjourn Debate	Used for proposing a short pause in the debating
Motion to Table the Resolution	Used for putting aside the current resolution and starting debate on the following resolution

Pre-ambulatory & Operative Clauses

One of the most tedious, yet potentially most interesting parts of writing a resolution is, of course, choosing the wording with which to start your clauses. What with there being so many options, and the general unclarity that may arise from the use of so many different openings, we have compiled a list of frequently used clause openings below. They are subdivided into Preambulatory and Operative Clauses, i.e. clauses used for stating the reasons for your resolution and clauses used for solving the issues diagnosed in the former.

The North Sea Foundation

This year, the good cause of CalsMUN is The North Sea Foundation! The North Sea is the largest nature reserve in the world, with a rich marine life, beautiful underwater nature, and of course lovely, endlessly long beaches. But the North Sea is also one of the busiest and most productive seas in the world. There are currently tensions between nature, energy, shipping, and food supply. The Climate Agreement will lead to significant growth in wind farms in the North Sea in the coming decades. The North Sea will therefore change completely in the coming years. If we continue on the current path, it simply won't fit. It is therefore urgent to achieve a healthy balance between nature, energy production and food supply in one of the busiest seas in the world. The Netherlands now has the opportunity to become a global leader in this: this way the blue economy uses its full potential, and we achieve our climate and nature goals!

The North Sea Foundation has been the most important organization for more than forty years when it comes to protection and sustainable use of the North Sea. The North Sea Foundation works to achieve a healthy ecosystem within and around the North Sea that is resilient to external influences. The North Sea nature should always be the starting point for sustainable use. The North Sea Foundation stands up for the North Sea and work together with other parties on solutions for current and future challenges in the North Sea!
